Ask What ways are police officers allowed into residences?

Ask What constitutes exigent circumstances?

Point out All the ways officers can enter residences apply just the same in relation to the protection of minors and investigating child abuse.

Review court cases if time permits. They are all cases in which police made warrantless entry during a child abuse investigation.

- a. In People v. Brown (1970) 12 Cal.App.3d 600, the peace officer intervened based upon a reasonable suspicion of sexual abuse upon an incapacitated victim.
- b. In re Dawn O. (1976) 58 Cal.App.3d 160, the courts decided the facts reasonably indicated that an unattended child (neglect) constitutes a substantial threat to his or her safety. The details of the case are described below.
- c. In People v. Sutton (1976) 65 Cal.App.3d 341, a peace officer had to determine whether the child was under the care of a responsible adult (endangerment of a minor in a private dwelling).
- d. In People v. Payne (1977) 65 Cal.App.3d 679, the court ruled that the officers' warrantless entry into a private dwelling was justified by exigent circumstances, which included prior reliable information about the suspect.
- e. In People v. Miller (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 190, the peace officer made a warrantless entry into a home to determine if a 2-year-old wandering in the neighborhood could be safely reunited with his parents and siblings.
